s.39 [REDACTED] but rather I would point to the "continuing review" component of the order which means that as facts change, so will the measures. The department has already communicated to a number of stakeholders that if banks can ascertain that people have removed themselves fully from the blockades and are no longer participating on an ongoing basis they should reconsider the freeze.

This is actually way more than I was hoping for 24 hours after the order.

Minister

You will see below an update on the enforcement efforts that are underway. You will see in the bullet points that the process is now well underway and that there are results.

Another point to note: a process is being assembled to ensure up to date reporting on a pretty real time basis. This will help sustain the pressure.

Michael,

We've reached out to the banks, FINTRAC and RCMP to get a preliminary sense of enforcement actions taken following the coming into force of the Order.

The Canadian Bankers Association is working with its members institutions to provide us aggregated data on accounts seized, including dollar value on a rolling basis. We touched base bilaterally with all the major banks and they are attempting to get us data for today but all have noted that they are still scrambling to try and get the numbers. We have another call with the general counsels of the large banks this evening, where we hope to get additional details. I expect we'll have a much clearer picture tomorrow. We've reached out to the credit unions and their industry association to gather similar info. That being said, some very preliminary data we have received include:

RCMP: Earlier today, the RCMP signaled the names of 14 individuals/entities to the banks as well as 21 crypto wallets. RCMP will be providing us daily updates on their outreach to financial institutions.

Banks : Desjardins has advised that they have frozen 20 accounts to date. CIBC has frozen five. Still awaiting data from some of the other major banks.

FINTRAC: 7 crowdfunding platforms and payment service providers, including many of the largest platforms and payment service providers have started the registration process with FINTRAC.

Of note, s.39

We'll come back to you with any additional data we receive. Don't hesitate to advise if you have any questions in the interim.
